Network World Peer-to-Peer Newsletter, 03/07/01

Reader Tom Ricci wrote in to say that his company's new Internet file-sharing service, Mangomind, appears to be gaining some traction with users.

Mangomind allows users to share files on an Internet drive that is integrated into the Windows operating system. According to Ricci, director of marketing communications at Mangosoft Corp., the drive has the same look and feel as a typical Windows C: drive. The drive administrator can invite an unlimited number of users to access and share files on the drive.

the charge is $82.75 per month with a one-year contract. For 25 seats and 250M bytes of storage, it's $365 per month with a one-year contract.

Ricci reports via e-mail that the greatest interest for the product is coming from business people on internal networks who need to
